INJURY LAW

Workers' Compensation Newsletter | April 2020

DID YOU KNOW?

Did you know you may be entitled to Workers' Compensation Benefits if you were exposed to COVID-19 in the workplace?

New Jersey Workers' Compensation Law allows for injured workers to recover benefits in the event of an "occupational exposure." The injured worker must show that it is more likely than not that the injury occurred as a result of causes and conditions related to a particular occupation, job process or procedure, or place of employment. See, N.J.S.A. 34:15-31.

In relation to COVID-19 exposure cases, some questions to consider are:

- Was there an increased risk of exposure due to the worker's occupation, such as first responders, healthcare workers and "essential" business employees?
- If not for their job, would they have been exposed to the virus?
- Can the worker identify a potential specific source or event during the performance of his or her employment that resulted in exposure to the new coronavirus?

If you have been exposed to COVID-19 while at work and you have been injured as a result, you may be entitled to Workers' Compensation benefits. Contact Managing Attorney Ryan Murphy at ryan@juddshawinjurylaw.com now to discuss your rights!

NJ Workers' Compensation Court Update

All New Jersey Workers' Compensation courts will remain closed to public until April 13, however, on April 6, judges will begin hearing as many workers' compensation matters as possible by telephonic conferencing, including all emergent matters and the following non-emergent matters, pre-trial conferences, general motions for medical and temporary benefits, and settlements by affidavit.

The Judd Shaw Injury Blog

Sometimes there's a silver lining in the middle of difficult times.

People and organizations throughout New Jersey have been coming together to support others in a number of ways since the start of the coronavirus outbreak. Seeing our communities support those within them has been a beautiful silver lining to this crisis.
